Teach kids not to bully

When children pick on other kids over and over, it isn't just part of growing up. It's bullying. And it's wrong.

As a parent, you are your child's first teacher. The lessons you give can last a lifetime. That means you have the power to teach your kids not to be bullies. Here are some ways you can help prevent bullying:

Teach respect. Talk to your kids early and often about treating people with respect. While they're still young, teach them not to tease other kids.

Be a good role model. Kids learn by watching adults, so set a good example by treating others with respect. Show your kids they don't have to tease or threaten to get what they want.

Talk about bullying. You might bring it up by asking questions like "How are things at school? Does anyone get picked on?"

Don't allow it. If you learn that your child is bullying someone, it's important to take action. Make sure they know that bullying hurts and is never OK. Work with your child's school to solve the problem.

HEALTH TIP: Some kids are afraid to speak up about bullies. Remind your child that it's OK to ask an adult for help.

Screening helps prevent cervical cancer

You don't usually think of cancer as something you can catch. But cervical cancer is nearly always caused by a virus.

Here's what happens: The human papillomavirus (HPV) is passed from person to person during sex. HPV causes cells on the cervix to change. They usually go back to normal on their own. But sometimes these cells turn into cancer.

That can take many years. In the meantime, women can protect themselves. Though there are no early symptoms of cervical cancer, these tests can find problems early:

An HPV test checks for the virus. Your doctor may suggest this if you are over age 29.

A Pap test checks for abnormal cells. You should begin having Pap tests at age 21.

Abnormal Pap test results don't usually mean cancer. But treating abnormal cells can put a stop to cancer before it starts.

HEALTH TIP: There are shots that can help protect against HPV. These are recommended for all kids ages 11 or 12. Women can get them through age 26, and they're available to young men through age 21.

Alcohol and your kidneys: What to know

Some dietary and other choices you make can help you live a healthy life despite kidney disease. But what about alcohol?

That's definitely something to talk to your doctor about, since alcohol may make some kidney problems worse. It can depend on how much and for how long you drink.

For instance:

Heavy drinking makes the kidneys work harder. Damaged kidneys already can't filter blood like they should. Heavy drinking makes them work even harder. Over time, it may affect their filtering ability and other important functions too.

Risky alcohol use can raise blood pressure. That's a leading cause of kidney disease. Alcohol may interact with drugs used to lower blood pressure too.

Alcohol use can lead to other problems, such as liver disease. This adds to the kidneys' workload too.

Protect your kidney health

So if you drink alcohol, make sure your doctor knows. Some people might be able to have a small amount. Others shouldn't drink at all.

Be sure to follow your health care team's advice about medicines and other lifestyle changes too. Doing so may help you keep your kidneys healthier longer.

The emotional benefits of mindfulness

Maybe you've heard this before: "Enjoy every moment. Life is short." It's a well-meaning cliché. It turns out, though, to be great advice.

Being fully in the moment is actually good for your emotional health. It's also the idea behind an ancient practice called mindfulness. Studies show this practice helps ease stress and depression. It can be a good way to calm down when you're feeling stressed — or move forward when you feel stuck.

Letting worries go

Mindfulness helps you be totally aware of what's happening in the present — instead of worrying about the past or future. It means accepting every moment, good and bad, without judgment.

There are many ways to practice mindfulness. It can be as simple as taking a walk. Become more aware of your breath, your feet on the ground, and the sights and sounds around you. If a worry crosses up, that's OK. Notice it, then refocus on the present. You can also: Sit quietly and repeat a word or phrase.

Concentrate on your natural breathing. If thoughts distract you, try to let them go without judgment. Then return to your breathing or mantra.

Focus on how your body feels. Check in with each part of your body, from head to toe. Notice and welcome all sensations, such as warmth, lightness, itching and tingling.

Be patient

Mindfulness takes practice. It's called a practice, after all. Try not to be discouraged if it doesn't come easily at first. Many people who stick with it say it helps them feel calm and content.

Taking a statin drug? Here's what to know

Cholesterol-lowering statin drugs are strong medicines. If you're at risk for a heart attack or stroke, taking a statin can reduce those chances.

Most people can take a statin without too much trouble. But there can be side effects. If you take a statin, these tips may help you safely get the most from your medicine:

Tell your provider about all of your medicines.

These include over-the-counter drugs and supplements too. Some medicines can negatively interact with statins.

Ask your provider if grapefruit juice is OK to drink. Grapefruit or its juices may affect how certain statins work.

Tell your provider if you have any side effects. If your statin doesn't help you or if it causes serious side effects, you might be able to try another medicine. Other drugs can help lower cholesterol too. Don't stop taking your medicine unless your doctor has told you to.

Six ways to weather the worst of spring allergies

Spring brings welcome sunshine and warmer temperatures. But for people with seasonal allergies, it can bring months of misery. Pollen and mold allergies can mean itchy eyes, coughing, sneezing and wheezing.

The good news is that you don't have to suffer if you know what to do. Here's how to keep symptoms at bay so you can enjoy spring:

- 1. Start meds sooner. Allergy symptoms can start well before April or May. Trees begin releasing their pollen if there are warmer days in winter. And once you're exposed, your system reacts. Start taking your allergy medications as soon as the weather calls for a streak of spring-like days.

- 2. Spring clean. Sweep away any dust or cobwebs that gathered over winter. Vacuum dog and cat hairs from where pets sit and sleep. Furry friends can track in pollen from outdoors.

- 3. De-mold. Mold grows where there's moisture. Get rid of any mold, especially in bathrooms and basements.

- 4. Keep windows shut. You may want to welcome spring with open windows, but pollen can drift indoors along with the fresh air. Inside, it can settle on carpets, furniture and bedding. If the weather is warm, use an air conditioner.

- 5. Visit the doctor. You can search your symptoms online and take over-the-counter allergy medications. But an allergist can test you and suggest the best treatments for your particular allergies. That may include allergy shots. If you're given medicine, take it as your doctor instructs.

- 6. Watch the clock. Depending on the season and what type of pollen you're allergic to, pollen levels may be better or worse at certain times of the day. Look up when pollen counts are lowest, and plan outdoor activities accordingly.

Good for your body and soul

For exercise, there may be nothing like the great outdoors

Is the gym feeling a little stale? Then you may need a change of scenery. And nowhere has more scenery than the great outdoors.

Need a reason to move outside? Research suggests that outdoor workouts boost your emotional health. One study found that outdoor workouts can lift your mood more and help you feel more energetic than indoor ones. Another found that as few as five minutes of outdoor exercise can improve self-esteem. That's especially true if you're near greenery or water.

Working out outdoors also lets you:

Connect with nature. That's one of the best perks of outdoor exercise.

Save money. You don't need a gym membership! The outdoors belongs to all of us.

Potentially burn more calories. When you're jogging or biking outdoors, a strong headwind can help you burn more calories. You have to work harder to overcome the wind's resistance.

Get out and enjoy!

So rather than staying cooped up inside, try a brisk walk. Go alone to clear your mind. You could also walk with a buddy to socialize. Work out your muscles on a local hill, bike on a neighborhood street, or walk one lap and jog the next at a nearby school track.

In the mood for adventure? Treat yourself to a walk in the woods. Take the trail along a stream at a park. See if a park close by has exercise equipment. Many parks do now.

You can turn exercise into family time too. Play on a playground with your kids or grandkids. Take a nature hike together. After all, everybody deserves to have fun outdoors.
